Evocations of Eros

Delight in Disorder
A sweet disorder in the dress
Kindles in clothes a wantonness:
A lawn about the shoulders thrown
Into a fine distraction:
An erring lace, which here and there
Enthralls the crimson stomacher:
A cuff neglectful, and thereby
Ribbands to flow confusedly:
A winning wave (deserving note)
In the tempestuous petticoat:
A careless shoe-string, in whose tie
I see a wild civility:
Do more bewitch me, than when art
Is too precise in every part.

Robert Herrick (1591-1674)

First Elegy

Who, if I cried out, would hear me among the angels’ hierarchies? and even if one of them pressed me suddenly against his heart: I would be consumed in that overwhelming existence. For beauty is nothing but the beginning of terror, which we still are just able to endure, and we are so awed because it serenely disdains to annihilate us. Every angel is terrifying.

Rainer Maria Rilke, (1875-1926) The First Elegy, Duino Elegies, Stephen Mitchell, Translator
“There is a fear, always latent in the countertransference, that reparation can turn to destruction, that love can injure as well as heal....In any event, the fear of destructiveness is surely central to all individual and cultural fears of sexuality, the fear that sexuality can be a traumatic force: greedy, selfish, oblivious, invading, shattering, exploiting....The psychoanalytic endeavor is intended to identify what can be healing as well as destructive in the erotic; and contribute to lifting the weight of the taboo that prevents our conscious participation in that endeavor. “ (Benjamin, 1994, 201)

Eros is a reaching out of the soul to a hoped-for good. The object is eternal beauty. In its crudest form, love for a beautiful person is really a passion to achieve immortality through offspring by that person. A more spiritual form is the aspiration to combine with a kindred soul to give birth to sound institutions and rules of life. Still more spiritual is the endeavor to enrich philosophy and science through noble dialogue.
